

The 2014 IUPAP Young Scientist Prize for Computational Physics

has been awarded to

Professor Mathieu Salanne

Université Pierre et Marie Curie, Paris

for the development of appropriate methods to allow realistic atomistic simulation of molten salts and ionic liquids in situations of relevance to electrochemistry.